

A NEW SPOT OF SCENIC BEAUTY OPENED IN CENTRAL PARK

A general view of the conservatory gardens in Central Park which were formally dedicated yesterday Times Wide World

Children from Park Department's playgrounds dancing at the exercises

Garden Replacing Greenhouses In Central Park Opened by Moses

Tranquil Beauty of Six-Acre Plot Marks the Beginning of 'New Tradition,' Official Says—500 Attend Ceremony —Folk-Dances on the Program

The Conservatory Garden in Central Park was opened yesterday, when Robert Moses, Park Commissioner, turned over the six-acre plot at Fifth Avenue and 105th Street to the city, inviting residents to enjoy its quiet and beauty.

Thousands of hardy perennials, leafy shrubs, clinging vines and countless varieties of red, yellow, blue and purple flowers are planted in symmetric designs. A contrast is offered in the screeching of brakes and roaring of engines as the endless stream of automobiles passes within sight on Fifth Avenue.

In welcoming the 500 men and women who attended the exercises, Mr. Moses declared that this garden marked the "beginning of a new tradition," indicating that similar gardens would be created in the other boroughs. He took to task "self-perpetuating boards of directors" who were afraid of change, and afraid to provide adequate facilities of this nature.

The garden, Mr. Moses said, is taking the place of the greenhouses that stood here until about two years ago, when plans were completed to develop the grounds to accommodate greater numbers. However, objection arose in some quarters to the removal of the greenhouses, Mr. Moses continued.

"I must confess," he added, "that I am not so much entertained as others by leafy palms and exotic plants that eat beefsteak at night and bloom once in 1,000 years."

"I hope that in addition to this garden in Central Park, we will have similar gardens in outlying parks of the city. We have exploded the idea that every one can get to Central Park. Literally millions find it difficult to come here and they must find whatever they can in the way of gardens and exhibits nearer home."

Mr. Moses said that he had suggested to the directors of the Brooklyn and Bronx Botanical Gardens that they assume the responsibility for providing suitable gardens in their boroughs. His suggestions were not received favorably, he commented.

"You know that self-perpetuating boards of directors move slowly and do not like suggestions from commissioners, who, after all, they feel are only around for a short time," he added. "I remember during the Central Park Casino case some one referred to me as a 'passing creature of the day.' That may be so, but I hope in that day to get much of this sort of thing accomplished."

Because of the work done by Mr. Moses, New York has become a "more beautiful, happier city," Dr. John H. Finley said, in delivering the only other address on the program. He expressed gratitude that the old greenhouses had been removed to be replaced by the garden.

"In creating this garden where the greenhouse of grimy roof and tortuous slippery paths once stood, where few ever came to see if there was any beauty to discover, the Park Department has opened a new testament of beauty that was in the thought of him who planned such a garden eighty years ago, and that will go on blossoming for centuries, no doubt," Dr. Finley said.

"I cannot agree with the old English poet who said that they who love a garden will love a greenhouse, too. But certainly they who have loved the old greenhouse will love even more the garden that is to replace it."

"I am glad to know that it is to be a formal garden, such as Maeterlinck described, where flowers 'tilled the light' in an orderly way and displayed themselves in beds and clusters, in symmetrical borders like 'precious matters contained in ordered receptacles,' where each plant has its place, where each group of plants contributes its share to the perfection of the whole, instead of a crowd of plant and flower of mob potentialities that may break into a riot and deprive the minorities of their rights or become a drab, uninteresting anarchic mass of vegetation where things seem to grow haphazard."

"This city must be lastingly grateful for what the Park Department under the direction of Commissioner Moses has done in cooperation with the Creator in making this a more beautiful, happier city and world."

The exercises included several folk-dances on the central lawn of the garden, performed by 150 children 10 and 12 years old from the park playgrounds of the West Bronx and the Bay Ridge section of Brooklyn. A group of Bronx children, dressed in red bandanas, green bodices, flowered calico skirts and white aprons, representing Italian peasant girls, danced the tarantella.

Continued on Page Eight

CITY PARK GARDEN OPENED BY MOSES

Continued From Page One

Another group, garbed as Scotch Highlanders in plaid kilts, performed a sword dance. The girls used wooden swords. Brooklyn girls, garbed in skirts of pastel shades, wearing wreaths of flowers and carrying colored garlands, danced the Venetian waltz.

Park attendants acted as guides on a tour of inspection following the exercises. According to the attendants, the sixty mature crabapple trees lining both sides of the flower garden will bloom early in April and the tiny apples will turn from green to bright red in the Fall.

Prominent among the shrubs and flowers to be found on the south side of the garden as lilacs, asters, delphiniums, chrysanthemums, pink, rose, white and yellow hollyhocks, rock plants, iris of all varieties and daphnes.

The promenade beneath the wrought-iron pergola is laid out to represent the thirteen original States. A disk four feet in diameter has been placed in the center of each panel, with the names of the States in the order in which they were formed printed in each panel. In a few years the pergola is expected to be covered with the wisteria that has been planted at the base of each panel.

The construction work was done under the direction of John Mahon, construction superintendent.